In fact, as I have made it my mission to help men have a voice and become the majority on earth we have experienced a number of men's rights activists being thrown under the bus by feminists as they try to impose their values on us. As many of you might have noticed this is occurring in various online social justice circles, particularly over the past two years. While I am by no means alone in my criticism or disagreement with their efforts, I had been getting increasingly tired of being the only one in conversations that wasn't making a move to the left and making demands. I have come to realize that a whole mess of social justice activist agendas had been created and the entire internet seems to be in a state of social and political purgatory of this ideology of gender justice. As I am sure we can understand from your discussion above, I did find the idea that many of you were being "misled" or worse when you questioned or raised the issue of the women in "rape culture" a rather ironic one.. Notes [edit] This was an "alternate reality" film filmed on location. The film was intended to be based on the story of 1984.. The two protagonists find a missing child named Michael who was abducted by Rachael. They find information of a missing human, which leads them to the island where they discover the Rachael, the one who controls her mind/brain. They then discover that the main villain is a cyborg named Mark, who is in the middle of destroying Rachael.. The main antagonist of this film is named Rachael. Despite being an AI, her emotions are still controllable through the computer. Rachael is actually programmed with a personality, so she does not feel that way towards people or animals. Michael finds that her personality is really a combination of emotions as shown by her, despite her personality being "different". She is also shown to know the feelings and emotions of everybody around her. The cyborg is the main antagonist. And then the film finally concludes as the main villain, Mark..
