It's been several years since I've played it, but that's no excuse for anyone. If you've never played it before, it's a pretty unforgiving game. Played it for a little while on Xbox Live Arcade, and it was an awesome game. I think it holds up really well even in this day and age, and that's not a compliment. I'll probably have to get the 3.6.1 patch for it because it's an age old game now, and it's not completely fair that the devil's luck dragon is as strong as ever. D3 should have been developed as a standalone, more action orientated game, not one that's really... The gameplay was not as good as D2. The core mechanics felt like they were trying to be a clone of D2, which worked out for the most part but it sucked the fun right out of the game. 'pretty' than D2, and Diablo III was more like Diablo: Hell & Back Again, which was probably D2 2.0 and not the true version. The game mechanics were very much like D2, which made it a bit more easy, but it wasn't nearly as much fun as D2. This game had moments of 'fun' but not enough to really hold my attention, and it wasn't fun at all. Diablo III shouldn't even have been released. Blizzard has made it very clear that they don't want it to be the beginning of their action-RPG series, but they wanted to capitalize on the success of D2. If you don't try to release a game after a game that's a success, that's fine, but it isn't fair to the people who played that game and were disappointed with the new one. Look at WoW. When WoW was released, people were excited about it because they liked Blizzard's games. However, the experience they had with WoW was far from the one they expected. Even though WoW was a great game, it disappointed a lot of people who expected it to be a little more in line with what Diablo II was. Diablo III is following the same path. The story is going to be more of a spinoff and less of the main story from D2. The game is going to be more of a hack and slash rather 82157476af
